

Title Shoulder Patch

Date 2001

Primary Maker Connecticut Yankee Council

Medium Machine-embroidery in synthetic threads on synthetic or cotton backing, coated with plastic

Description This shoulder patch was worn by Troop 204 at the Connecticut

Yankee Council 2001 National Jamboree. It depicts Mark Twain, a famous author and adventurer. The ground of this patch is done in royal blue embroidery thread, and the edging is done in silver embroidery thread. There is an American flag on the left side of the patch and a crest with an eagle and American flag motif on the right. Connecticut Yankee Council scouts, leaders, and staff attending the 2001 National Scout Jamboree wore these distinctive council shoulder patches, each designed around the portrait of a famous Connecticut native. Troops made their own name selections and built gateway and Jamboree themes around those people. This set of thirteen patches includes the eleven Jamboree troops, a troop from Westchester Putnam Council, and the

Basic Detail Report

Staff shoulder patch, which depicts the 29th Connecticut Volunteers, an all black regiment that served with distinction during the Civil War. The Connecticut

Historical Society participated in finding historically accurate representations, and gained authorization for their use when necessary.

Dimensions Primary Dimensions (height x width): 2 1/4 x 5in. (5.7 x 12.7cm)