Medium Pressed buff-colored earthenware with white, black, blue, and tan underglaze enamels

Basic Detail Report

Inside, the scene shows a bearded man in a toga on the left, looking at a woman in classical garb standing on a platform. There is a small, seven-stringed harp at her feet, and an urn with a plant inside on a ledge behind the woman. A third figure, only half in the scene, sits at the extreme left, also wearing classical clothing. It is possible that the initials "IMS" are printed in black on the lower right side of the scene. The circular scene is surrounded by a black and white geometric, circular border, then four roughly triangular panels at each of the corners. Each of the triangles is divided into nine sections by black lines that radiate from a shell-shaped motif. The scene and triangles are colored with tan and blue over the white ground of the tile. The white covers the sides, and has dripped onto portions of the back of the tile. Several long and short streaks of an unknown substance, perhaps glue or a cement, colored grey and tan, appear on the right side of the tile's decorative surface.
