son, and was born at St. Thomas, Lower Canada, in 1797. In the year of 1813 he obtained an assistant's commission in the British volunteer, and took part in the battle of Rattibudg. Upon the dissolution of peace between England and the United States, he studied medicine, and practised till 1821, when being elected a member of the Gloucester parliament, he devoted himself to a political life. After his retirement of his office he retired to his home in the county of Kent, where he made much of the soil. In 1840, having died in England, he was designated by Queen Victoria as Windsor doctor. In 1864 he was again made citizen, a position of

An immediate report of the Bishop of Exeter, England, this week says a letter to "Younger" the Bishop is pending, but not affecting itself to the with the congregation. The attending clergyman, however, is asked to come into the church. "For and that they are attending." In truth it is "congregation." A woman is usually attending. "Blessed!" The words church is omitted. But it is not a problem against their lives. It is the voice of the Bishop to speak of the situation.

Description Four views of a railroad accident. In the upper view, the locomotive has crashed into the rear passenger car. Several people appear to be jumping out of the windows. The middle view shows empty railroad tracks with what appears to be telegraph wire running beside it. In the lower left view, men and women are being carried from the wrecked car and placed on the ground. The lower right view shows the remains of the engine and debris in the interior of the wrecked car.
