forming thick, cylindrical sides that rise to a plain rim. The mortar is decorated with bands of raised lines on the lower and top quarter of the exterior sides and base. The pestle that was once used with this mortar is missing. Additionally, the mortar has sustained heavy damage. There is a hole in the bottom inside of the mortar, which is associated with a large area of loss on the bottom of the mortar. Some of the sides of this area are glazed, suggesting that there were gouges in the bottom of the mortar prior to additional damage associated with the hole on the inside of the mortar. There are at least three additional chips on the foot, as well as a large area of loss on the rim of the mortar. The clay on the edge of this break is smooth, and may be glazed, suggesting that this could be an original design feature of the mortar. A thick line of an unknown brown substance has dripped down from the rim to the side of the mortar.
