Description (a) Audio file of interview with Shanel Aliano O'Neil. She was interviewed by Lauren Palen on 13 March 2025 in Burlington, CT. (b) Photograph of Shanel Aliano O'Neil taken at her interview. Shanel Aliano O'Neil was interviewed as part of the Connecticut Museum of Culture and History's Community History Project discussing moments of change in her life. Shanel O'Neil (Aliano) discusses her change of moving to Manassas, Virginia for job opportunities. Her decision to make that move changed her as a person because she faced multiple challenges and discoveries during her time there. She moved to Virginia in 2007 after graduating college in Keene, New Hampshire. Shanel struggled to find a job during a time of financial uncertainty in 2007, which was the driving force that caused her to move. She describes her struggles with moving because she had close ties with her family in Connecticut. She talks about creating new friendships and joining various activities. These activities and friendships provided comfort during this time of change. Shanel talks about her strong will and healing personality which she credits to the female family members who drove her in her career as an environmental remediation project manager. Shanel describes how her relationships changed during her time away and how those changes affected her. She also mentions the gender imbalance and her struggle to get her voice heard in her work environment. Nevertheless, this did not stop her from continuing to use her voice and ideas for projects of change. Her life is mostly virtual now after moving back to Connecticut, which is something she loves as it offers more time for her to spend with her husband and son. However, she mentions certain challenges she faces by working
