Title Man's Coat or Cape with Overcape

Date about 1865-1885

Primary Maker Unknown

Medium Machine-stitched and hand-stitched wool, with composite buttons and two different bias tapes for finishing. The buttons have been chewed by a rodent, suggesting they are not an early synthetic product.

Description Man's dark green wool sleeveless coat or cape with an overcape.

The center front opening extends the length of the cape and fastens with eleven one-inch-diameter black buttons, decorated with a floral design in the centers.

The buttons are on the proper right side with corresponding handmade buttonholes on the proper left. Each side-front has a patch pocket at hip height, decorated with two buttons and a wedge appliqué of green wool. The pockets are trapezoids (square-shaped with a bottom wider than the top). The coat is constructed with side seams, into which two godets (triangular insertions) have been stitched to widen the bottom circumference. The armholes are finished with light green bias tape, machine-stitched in place. The overcape is attached at the neck, along each shoulder seam, and down the front of each armhole. It curves down to be 33 3/4 inches long at the center back. Small wedges of wool are sewn to each side of the cape to complete the circle. The overcape is edged with a black bias tape that is machine-stitched. A collar, edged with black bias
