Primary Maker Staffordshire potteries

Medium Mechanically-molded buff-colored earthenware with a blue-tinted glaze and underglaze red decoration

Description Small, round, child's mug made of buff-colored earthenware with a blue-tinted glaze, a type of ceramic known as pearlware. The mug has a small, mold-formed handle and is decorated with transfer-printed scenes and words.

Two scenes and one group of sayings are written beneath the title "DR.

showing a team of horses plowing a field behind a wooden fence. In the foreground, poultry graze on some grass, and a broom and gardening implement lean against the fence. To the right of this scene is Franklin's saying,

"Plough deep while Slug-/ gards sleep & you shall/ have corn to sell & to keep".

There is a horizontal line, then an additional maxim, "Work to day for you know/not how much you may be/ hindered tomorrow". (The final line of words is printed at a slant off the bottom of the mug.) Finally, the second scene, to the left of the handle, shows a person, perhaps a child, holding a basket and picking something off of a bush. There is a sheep in the foreground, and rolling hills and a farm building in the background. Both scenes and words are poorly printed beneath a very thin glaze, resulting in a textured surface. There are two small chips on the rim and one small chip on the foot of the mug.
