Mendelssohn was interviewed as part of the Connecticut Museum of Culture and History's Community History Project discussing moments of change in his life.

The interview is conducted by Lauren Palen for the Community History Project at the Connecticut Museum of Culture and History. The interviewee, Jacob (Jake) Mendelssohn, introduces himself, as a semi retired individual and he discusses his change of how everything he planned for did not happen and how his life turned out to be something completely unexpected. Jacob starts his story off by describing his childhood in Pennsylvania and interests of building various things. He eventually wanted to become an engineer. He faced some pushback from his parents as they wanted something different for him. He ended up studying chemical engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

After this experience, he found himself struggling to find work he really enjoyed. He then found a teaching job at Talcott Mountain Science Center in Avon, Connecticut. He enjoyed this experience greatly as it offered him an opportunity to learn and teach various subjects. This opportunity opened him up to the Connecticut Invention Convention, which he is still a part of today, and his teaching position at Greater Hartford Academy of Math and Science. Jacob describes various stories working for the Connecticut Invention Convention and how this has given him the opportunity to travel, learn from others, and interact with people and their ideas all over the world. This gives him great pride and joy to continue learning and working with these people. He describes how he did not let his formal education limit his opportunities and how important it is to keep having learning experiences. Jacob mentions certain stories of people who have impacted him through the work that he was doing and how much that means to him. He emphasizes the importance of learning experiences and how they have changed everything he planned for in life.
