Title Colonial Clergyman Preaching at His Pulpit

Date 1947

Medium Drawing; ink wash and gouache with graphite on white wove paper with woodpulp paper lining

Description Drawing of a man preaching to a congregation. A man meant to represent Thomas Hooker stands at a pulpit with a book and speaks to a group of men and women seated in pews. The congregation is split, with the men seated on one side and the women seated on the other side. There are two windows in the background. The drawing has been revised on the left where the congregation is seated. An additional piece of paper is pasted over the original left half of the drawing.
