Description East-west oriented map of Hartford, Connecticut, as it appeared between the seventeenth and nineteenth centuries. Roads as they existed in 1640 are depicted with solid black lines, and "modern" roads in broken solid black lines. All of the roads are labeled and many of the modern roads are dated. Circled numbers on the map correspond to a reference list below it which names the site--dwellings, jails, meeting houses, forts, schools, and the like--and in some cases provides a date. Washington College (later renamed Trinity College) is depicted at the top of the map. The Connecticut River (Great River) and the Park River (Little River) are the only natural features depicted.
