Title Connecticut Highways, 1942

Date 1942

Medium paper

Description Map of Connecticut highways in 1942, distributed by the Connecticut State Highway Department. One side is a color map of the state highways and other roads. The background of the state outline is white, and the surrounding states are yellow. The roadways are indicated in red. There is an index on the left side of the map indicating the location of Connecticut towns. On the reverse side, there is a black and white map on the bottom right showing the locations of the state police barracks, state parks and forests, and highway first aid stations. This map has a key to the state police telephone numbers. Across the top of the page are seven black and white photos of select towns and a close up view of those cities. The cities are: Hartford, Waterbury, Danbury, New London, Norwich, Bridgeport, and New Haven. Beneath these photos on the left hand side of the page is a black and white map close up of the Merritt Parkway and Long Island Sound. On the bottom left of the page is a mileage table showing approximate distances between points in Connecticut. Next to the table on the right, regulations concerning speed and manner of driving are listed.
