Description (a) Interview with Tiffiny Stanley. Interviewed by Penny Newbury on 20 July 2022 in Woodstock, Connecticut. (b) Photograph of Tiffiny Stanley taken at her interview. She was interviewed as part of the Connecticut Historical Society's Community History Project discussing her experience during the COVID-19 Pandemic. Tiffiny was scared when she first heard about COVID. She did not have work for a while, so she picked up a side job walking her friend's dog. Tiffiny protected herself and others by wearing masks and practicing social distancing. She was happy when she heard about the vaccine. During the pandemic, she used the internet to research COVID, use social media, and watch movies and TV. The pandemic was difficult for Tiffiny because she could not exercise and do the sports she enjoys since they are indoor sports. Her advice to people experiencing future pandemics is to wear a mask, social distance, and quarantine if you feel like you are ill.
