What shall I say to thee, my dear,
When thou art far from me,
And sitting on the window pane,
Watching a lot of rain,
And I go to the window,
Which has been closed long,
And see that there is nothing there,
But dark as night and cold.

NUMBER ONE.

The world will never be the same,
And glory passing by,
There's none young like an angel now,
The stars are bright and clear,
And the moon looks so fair,
But she's grown up now,
And she's so lovely, sweet and kind,
There is a shadow there.

Basic Detail Report

Description A young woman sits in a chair on a balcony before an open window.

Her elbow rests on a table covered with a tablecloth. She wears a dress, a shawl, and flowers, probably roses, in her hair. The balcony has an iron railing, and the window has Venetian blinds. A paneled door or shutter is at the left, with patterned drapery nearby. A small bird is in a birdcage at the upper left. Bushes and vines are in the foreground.
