Date 1798

Primary Maker Catherine Wadsworth

Medium Hand-stitched and hand-embroidered cotton muslin and linen tape

Description Sheer white cotton muslin, embroidered with an undulating leafy vine design, alternating with stripes worked with different openwork patterns. A simple, four-petaled flower head design is scattered between stripes. The dress has a low, rounded neckline controlled by a drawstring. The bosom is covered by two flaps of linen, which overlap and pin underneath the muslin. The short sleeves, which end in a cuff created from a self-fabric openwork stripe, are set smoothly into the armscye in front and gathered in back. The armscyees are deep, so that the measurement across the center back is only six inches. The front of the dress hangs straight and full from the neckline; the fullness would have been controlled with a ribbon belt, which is now missing. The back of the dress, which is lined with plain-woven linen, has four seams that fan slightly outward from the center back waistline to the center of the armscyees and the neckline. (These seams are topstitched with a tiny backstitch that resembles machine sewing.) The waistline is high, measuring 3 1/2 inches at the side seam under the armhole. The back of the skirt is closely gathered for about 7 1/2 inches across the center back; to either side of the gathering, there are two pleats for additional fullness. The back of the skirt ends in a train, approximately twenty inches longer than the front hemlength.
