

AGAVE BARNUMNIANA HUMBUGIENSIS, OR American Aloe.

Recently exhibited in Connecticut, where it suffered from exposure, it was originally found there, has been long preserved in a Green-house near the Park in New York, cultivated by the Towne, and lately by Mainwaring.

The leaves are a deep green, bordered with gold. A new one is added every year, some of which decay rapidly before maturity, as have the two lower leaves in this specimen.

Flowers once in a century. Just flowered.

Basic Detail Report

Description Caricature of P.T. Barnum as a plant. A plant, shaped like an agave or an aloe, grows in a large round pot. A portrait of a man, P.T. Barnum, is at the

"ANNIHILATOR" "FEJEE MERMAID" "WOOLY HORSE" "MUSEUM" "JOYCE HEATH"

"TOM THUMB" "JENNY LIND" "MAINE LAW". A sketch map on the flower pot is
