Description An eighteenth-century farmstead consists of a five-bay Colonial center chimney clapboard house with shutters and a porch, plus three outbuildings on the left, including a woodshed. There are chickens in the foreground. A woman wearing a dress and hat stands on the porch. A boy wearing a coat is in front of her, near a man wearing a coat and hat. Also on the porch are four wooden chairs and two toy rocking horses. An open container is in the right foreground. What appears to be a fish weathervane or lightning rod is on the roof of the center outbuilding. The mount is blind stamped with a repeating border design and corner fleurons.
