Description Map of the part of Maine through which flow the headwaters of the Aroostook, Penobscot and St. John Rivers, from the borders of Canada

(probably the province of Canada) to the north, New Brunswick to the east, the towns of Corinth and Hudson to the south, and Somersset County to the west.

The rivers and area lakes are featured prominently on the map, with elevation being conveyed through hachure marks. The land is divided into towns and unnamed-but-numbered ranges, with unbroken boundary lines; and counties, with broken solid and dotted lines, and labeled in capital letters. There are two vignettes on the right side of the map. The one at the top depicts a canoe sitting on the bank of a river, paddle leaning against it. A camera is propped up on a tripon, facing a waterfall a short distance away. The one at the bottom shows a camping scene, with several men sitting around outside of tents, with various camping-related accoutrements around them.
