Basic Detail Report

Description Map of Plainfield, Connecticut, with Killingly to the north; Sterling to the east; Griswold and Voluntown to the south; and the Quinebaug River, Canterbury and Brooklyn to the west. Plainfield is divided into districts, colored yellow, pink or green. The roads are labeled and small black squares mark the locations of houses and stores, labeled with the owner's name. The New York and New England Railroad runs through the town. Physical features include elevation, conveyed with hachure marks, swamps, brooks, and forests. In the top left corner are a distance table and a list of facts about Plainfield, including its population, latitude, and altitude.
