Basic Detail Report

Title Alvarado Hotel and Sante Fe Depot, Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Date 1952-1953

Primary Maker Edward J. Rogalski

Medium Photography

Description A negative strip with images of the Alvarado Hotel and Sante Fe Depot in Albuquerque, New Mexico, 1952-1953. (.1-.2) A view of railroad tracks in front of the Alvarado Hotel in Albuquerque, New Mexico. The three-story building is designed in the Mission Revival style with hipped tiled roofs and exterior arcades. People are seen walking next to the tracks. Railroad carts sit on the right side of the image in between the tracks. (.3) Two men in military uniforms are posing in front of the Alvarado Hotel. The man on the left is posing with his left arm on his hip. Behind the men above the center arch reads, “Fred Harvey / INDIAN BUILDING.” (.4) Edward Rogalski, on the left, and another man in military uniforms posing in front of the Alvarado Hotel. Behind the men above the center arch reads, “Fred Harvey / INDIAN BUILDING.” (.5) View of a train on the railroad tracks. The railroad station on the left is the Santa Fe Depot. The one-story rectangular building is designed in the Mission Revival style with thick arches. In the distance, four soldiers in uniform are standing next to the train facing the camera.