Basic Detail Report

CONNECTICUT'S
FARMLAND PRESERVATION
PROGRAM

BIENNIAL REPORT (1993-1994)

Shirley Ferris
Commissioner

Joseph J. Dippel
Director

Connecticut's Farmland Preservation Program

One of Connecticut's greatest resources is it's farmland. The Department of Agriculture preserves farmland by acquiring development rights to agricultural properties. The farms remain in private ownership. A permanent restriction on all nonagricultural uses is placed on these properties.

The program is voluntary on the part of the applicant. Successful applicants will own active farms that contain a high percentage of prime farmland soils and are in established farm communities.

Farmers strongly support the program and think of it as a permanent program that will be there to give them a realistic alternative to selling their farm for residential development.

Title Connecticut’ s Farmland Preservation Program Biennial Report

(1993-1994)

Date 1993-1994

Primary Maker Connecticut Department of Agriculture

Medium paper, printed ink, staple

Basic Detail Report

Description A five-page report titled, Connecticut’ s Farmland Preservation

Program Biennial Report (1993-1994).

Dimensions Primary Dimensions (overall height x width): 11 × 8 1/2in. (27.9 × 21.6cm)